In August 2027, I'm taking on Mount Kilimanjaro, the world's tallest free-standing mountain, in support of Dig Deep - an award-winning charity working to transform access to clean water, safe toilets and good hygiene for communities in Kenya. It's a huge personal challenge, and one that I'm proud to be doing to help create lasting change.

Just £15 is enough to provide someone with clean drinking water - saving lives, improving education and empowering women and girls. Everything I raise will be split 50/50 between covering my in country trip costs (I'm paying for my own flights!) and a direct donation to support Dig Deep's work. If you'd like to support my journey and contribute to this vital work, you can check out my fundraising page here: [insert link]

Next summer, I'll be heading to Tanzania to climb Mount Kilimanjaro, the tallest free-standing mountain in the world, in support of Dig Deep (Africa) and their mission to transform access to clean water, safe toilets, and hygiene education in rural Kenya.

I've taken on this challenge to step outside my comfort zone, grow personally and professionally, and raise awareness for one of the world's most pressing issues: access to water and sanitation. It's a cause that's deeply connected to education, gender equality, and long-term health. And it is one I'm proud to support.

Between now and the climb in 2027, I'll be planning a series of fundraising events, getting involved in awareness campaigns, and training for the 5,895m summit. The funds will be split 50/50 between covering my in country trip costs, and directly supporting Dig Deep's sustainable projects in Bomet County, Kenya - helping to deliver lasting change in line with several UN Sustainable Development Goals.

Beyond the fundraising, I'm excited to develop real-world skills in leadership, digital communication, project management, and global development, all while being part of a student-led initiative that makes a tangible impact.
